HORNBLOWR IS NOT TO BE CONFIRMED.

PRESIDENT'S NOMINATION REJECTED TODAY.

Democrats at Last Secure a Quorum and Adopt a Report That Insures The Beginning of Work on The Wilson Tariff Bill.---No Hawaiian Message Before Wednesday.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8—Cleveland and the senate must now fight it out. The president's nomination of Hornblower, the corporation attorney, as justice of the supreme court came before the judiciary committee of the senate today. It was sent back with a recommendation that it be rejected.

In the house today the democrats secured a quorum at last and adopted the report of the committee on rules providing tariff legislation be taken up.

There is no probabilily of a special Hawaiian message before Wednesday when the president expects to receive mail that was brought to Honolulu by the Corwin. In spite of this delay Hawaii gets an inning. The opportunity now stands open in the shape of two resolutions. One of these is the Frye resolution, declaring that there should be no further interference by the United States in Hawaii pending the conclusion of the investigation now being made by the senate committee on foreign relations. The second resolution is that introduced by Mr. Hoar, calling for a statement of the expenditures made by Mr. Blount and the authority therefor. Mr. Frye intends to try to force his resolution to a vote to-day. Senator Davis of Minnesota proposes to deliver a set speech on the Hawaiian situation during this week.

Mr. Gray has given notice that he will to-morrow call up the house bill to repeal the federal election laws, which has been confided to his management by the committee on privileges and elections. It is understood to be the policy of the democratic senators, animated by a desire to secure speedy action upon the bill, to refrain, as far as possible, from debating the measure, and it is believed that perhaps that the only speech now in contemplation by that side will be delivered by Senator Vance, the chairman of the committee. The republicans, however, will freely express their criticism of this measure, and, once the subject is before the senate, a number of speeches will doubtless be forthcoming in support of the minority report.

Some interest is shown in the executive sessions that will probably fill in a good part of the time during the week, because of the expectation that action will be reached upon the nomination of Mr. Prestion to be director of the mint,

The investigation of the Holman resolutions, intimating that the payment of speed premiums to contractors of naval vessels was made pursuant to collusion between the contractors and officials of the navy department will probably close to-day or to-morrow.

Wednesday the committee on coinage, weights and measures will meet to begin an examination of Chairman Bland's bill authorizing the issuance of certificacts against the seigniorage of the bullion purchased under the Sherman law.

INCOME TAX SCHEME PERFECTED.

It Is to Be Reported To-day to the Democratic Members.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—The subcommittee of the committee on ways and means in charge of the income tax feature of the tariff bill held a conference Saturday night and was in session again yesterday. The subcommittee has about perfected the administrative features of the bill and expect to make a report this morning to the democratic members of the full committee. It may be necessary for the subcommittee to have another short session. The commissioner of internal revenue has not been asked for an estimate of the probable expense of collecting the income tax, but the subcommittee believes it can be collected easily for between 2 and 3 per cent of the total amount of the tax. A prominent member of the subcommittee expressed the belief that the votes of the men who decided in favor of an income tax will also be cast in favor of making this feature a rider on the tariff bill. The members of the committee who voted for the income tax were Messrs. McMillin, Bryan, Turner, Whiting, Tarsney, and Bynum. Still there is a strong impression that the two bills may be reported as independent measures. Messrs. Breckinridge (Ark.), Wilson and Montgomery will probably act with the majority of the democrats in whatever they decide upon.

Young Counterfeiter Kills Himself.

WHEELING, W. Va., Jan. 8.—Jack Meredith, a young criminal convicted of counterfeiting and serving a sentence in the county jail, was found dead in his cell, having hanged himself with a strip of blanket. Meredith's guilt was plain, and added to his sentence was a $300 fine. He was not able to pay his fine, and this, with the fact that another charge was to be brought against him as soon as released, so preyed on his mind that he ended all.

The new Pilgrim hotel at Marshalltown, Iowa, costing $75,000 was formally opened with a reception ball and banquet. There were 300 guests.

DE MELLO'S CAUSE GROWING.

Plexoto's Warships Alone Prevent an Uprising at Pernambuco.

ST. VINCENT, West Indies, Jan. 8.—A dispatch from the Associated press correspondent at Pernambuco dated Dec. 27 brings the latest news as to the actual state of affairs not only at Pernambuco but in the northern portion of Brazil. The greatest difficulty, he says, is experienced in sending dispatches out of Brazil which in any way touch upon the actual state of affairs in that revolutionary country.

It appears that the press censorship is so rigorous that anything in any way reflecting upon the government or giving news adverse to the administration of President Peixto is either mysteriously delayed or so twisted and colored as to no longer retain the spirit of the original. With the assistance of friends in Brazil the correspondent has been able to forward the information that all denials to the contrary, conspiracies in favor of De Mello and the insurgent cause are cropping up in many parts of the north, where martial law alone seems to prevent a rising similar to that which has taken place in the south.

In this city and province even the military forces of the government would be insufficient to check the outburst of an insurrection in favor of De Mello, were it not for the presence here of the cruisers Nictheroy and America. This is no theoretical statement or announcement based upon rumor alone.

COURTHOUSE BURNED.

Mysterious Fire at Aurora, Neb., May Have Been Caused by Robbers.

AURORA, Neb., Jan. 8.—The courthouse at this place was burned yesterday about 3 o'clock. The entire building was burned to the ground. The records in the office of the county clerk, county judge and clerk of the district court are supposed to be safe, but the door to the treasurer's vault was found open, and it is supposed was blown open and all the records were destroyed. What money there was in the vault was in the safe and is all right. The records of the county superintendent's and surveyor's offices are supposed to be destroyed. There is no clew to the origin of the fire. Some suppose it was caused by the vault being blown open in an attempt to burglarize the treasurer's office.

REFUSED TO SELL LIQUOR.

C. V. Snow, a Medical Student at Omaha, Attempts Murder and Escapes.

OMAHA, Neb., Jan. 8.—At 6 o'clock last evening Charles V. Snow shot and seriously injured Patrick O'Hearn. O'Hearn is a saloonkeeper and was straightening up things in his place of business when Snow and a companion demanded admission. O'Hearn refused to let the men in or sell them any liquor. Snow then pulled a revolver and shot O'Hearn. Snow is a medical student. His home is in Oregon, where his father is a prominent railroad man. Snow has escaped and at a late hour had not been found by the police.

Billiard Match Begins To-Night.

CHICAGO, Jan. 8.—To-night the three cornered billiard tournament between Schaefer, Ives and Slosson will be opened, the latter and the Wizard, old opponents, being the contestants. Schaefer has always been rated the better player, and to watch the work of the two men one would without hesitation announce that the Wizard could discount the casterner, but their records show a remarkable evenness in results. Even in the last tournament at New York Slosson managed to get an even break with Schaefer.

Farmer Kills His Son.

ST. CHARLES, Ill., Jan. 8.—Clark C. Burr, a wealthy farmer living in this township, shot and killed his 17-year-old son last night. Deputy Sheriff Doherty summoned a jury, and Deputy Coroner Rushton of Elgin held an inquest. The jury returned a verdict of manslaughter, and Mr. Burr was placed under bonds of $10,000 to await the action of the grand jury. The boy had a revolver in his hand when killed. The cause of the shooting is not known.

Fire in a Michigan Village.

IRONWOOD, Mich., Jan. 8.—At 9 o'clock yesterday morning fire broke out in the business portion of Jessieville, destroying the buildings occupied by Joseph Borgo, saloon. William Muck, grocer, and D. A. Kennedy, contractor. Borgo owned the three burned buildings and his loss wsll be heavy, as he carried little insurance. Mack's stock was insured for $1,500.

Employes' Wages Advanced.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Jan. 8.—The New York and Cleveland Gas Coal company has conceded its employes an advance of 5 cents per ton in their wages. This brings the rate up to 60 cents per ton, or 5 cents below the district price. The concession was a great surprise to the men. It is thought probable that the rate will be accepted and that the miners will return to work.

Railway Progress in Mexico.

MONOCLOVA, Mexico, Jan. 8.—It is announced here that the Monterey and Mexican Gulf road will go from the hands of the receiver this month, and that work will then begin immediately on the extension of the road from Trevino to the port of Mazatlan, on the Pacific coast, via Sierra Mojado. The survey of this proposed extension has already been made.

MANY AT ASHLAND AFTER OMAHA LAND.

REGISTER'S OFFICE BESIEGED BY HOMESTEAD SEEKERS.

Susreme Court Decision Inspires Expectations--Orgauized Effort to Relieve Ottumwa's Poor--Rich Mineral Vein Struck--General Northwest News.

ASHLAND, Wis., Jan. 8.—The garbled reports of the decision of the Federal Supreme court have caused a great rush here of people to make application for homesteads on the Omaha land. It is said that the land covered by the Omaha grant in Northern Wisconsin is worth $20,000,000. One attorney said: "All there is to the Supreme court's decision is this: The legislature of Wisconsin reconveyed the grant from a company building a sixty-mile line to Superior to the Omaha road and the Supreme court decides that the Omaha company is liable for the amount of its contractor's contract for beating him out of his job. The road is liable for the $205,000 judgment, as its land will be sold."

Many women were among these first arrivals. An unexpected rush came yesterday afternoon. Owing to the lateness of the hour when it began only about a dozen could be accommodated by 4 o'clock. The renewed rush is occasioned by private telegrams received at Duluth and Ashland from responsible parties in Washington. One of these reads: "File on Omaha lands, quick. Advise friends." The opinion of land office attorneys and officials is changing, and as one of them expressed it: "There may be something in this after all. Those telegrams come from parties who have carfully read the Supreme court decision, a full copy of which has not been in the papers. It only costs applicants $1 to apply and there may be a big thing in it."

There are not less than forty settlers from Iron River in the city and all the hotels are filling up rapidly with those who wish to file. The great land rush when the indemnity lands were opened to settlement promises to be outdone. There are probably 1,000,000 acres in the grant and many of the sections are valued at $30,000 to $10,000.

TO RELIEVE OTTUMWA POOR.

Efforts of the City Officials Show Some Good Results.

OTTUMWA, Iowa, Jan. 8.—The efforts being made to relieve the condition of the unemployed are beginning to tell. At the labor bureau last night 250 more laborers have registered than work has been provided for. At a meeting held at the city hall it was decided to appoint a citizens' committee, which with capital furnished by popular subscription shall purchase standing timber to be converted into stove wood, and which will be furnished the residents of the city at $5 a cord. Many who have been burning coal will purchase wood stoves. All cases of immediate want are being provided for by the relief committee.

Cold Wave General in Northwest.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 8.—A cold wave struck St. Paul at 2 o'clock yesterday morning, and since that hour the temperance has ranged from 6 to 22 degrees below zero. Reports from the north show that the weather of northern Minnesota, northern Dakota and Manitoba is still more severe. At 10 o'clock last night the register at Crookston was 30 degrees below zero. At Neche it was 32 degrees below and and at Qu'Appelle 34 degrees below. The weather is clear, no wind blowing and no suffering is reported.

Strikes a Rich Mineral Vein.

DUBUQUE, Iowa, Jan. 8.—Joseph Baule of this city struck a big vein of mineral near Sinsinawa Mound, Wis. It is two feet in width and six feet in height, and he has already taken out 10,000 pounds. The mine was abandoned thirty years ago on account of water, but this has now nearly disappeared.

MUNGER IS SILENT.

The Corwin's Commander Refuses to Divulge Secrets.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Jan. 8.—Capt. Munger of the Corwin still keeps secret the state of affairs at Honolulu. He came ashore for a moment last evening, and though his demeanor was in every respect more suave and courteous than when he entered the port he nevertheless protested his inability to speak a word regarding the dispatches he had forwarded to Washington. Once he stated in effect that he knew more than had been telegraphed from Auckland, but whether he meant that remark to be accepted as implying that he was forbidden officially to state any more, or that something of importance had occurred during the two days that had elapsed between the departure of the Alameda and that of the Corwin, it is hard to tell. There is absolutely nothing positive known as to the situation in Hawaii, and all rumors of sensational happenings are untrustworthy.

LEADVILLE, Colo., Jan. 8.—A good gold find has been made in the Esther shaft of the Wolcott ground, within six blocks of the leading thoroughfare of the city. The strike is doubly important, as it has proven that there are gold deposits as well as silver and lead deposits beneath the city.

Last night a friend betrayed his presence here to the officers for the sum of ten dollars. The murderer was arrested, identified and taken back to Chattanooga, where he goes to die.

WILSON MAY DRAW OUT.

Iowa Senatorial Situation May Be Further Complicated.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Jan. 8.—There is liable to be a sensation in the senatorial contest. Senator Wilson, whose place is to be filled by whoever is elected this session, is at home sick. He has been an invalid for some time and is said to have written a letter that he does not want to go back to Washington. In fact it was asserted by an active politician yesterday that if Iowa had had a republican governor a year ago Wilson would have resigned then. But he did not want to make room for a democrat, and held over.

It is further stated that as soon as the joint session this week or next elects Wilson's successor to take Wilson's seat one year hence Gov. Jackson will present to the legislature Senator Wilson's resignature. The governor could appoint immediately a senator to fill out Wilson's unexpired term. But that is hardly likely, as the legislature being in session could at once proceed to elect for the unexpired term. This is likely to occur. If Wilson should send in word that he will resign this feature might make some difference in figuring, for whoever might be decided on for the unexpired term might throw his force to whoever he might want for winner. The situation among the various candidates is unchanged.

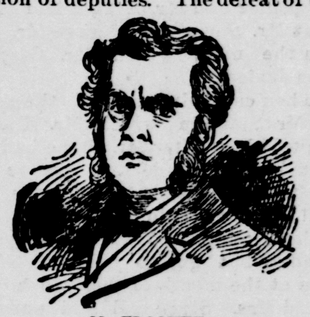
M. Floquet Elected--Italy May Be Forced Into a War,

PARIS, Jan. 8.—The first news from the senatorial elections held in France yesterday was that M. Floquet, ex-premier and ex-president of the chamber, had been chosen for a district of Paris. The voting was done at the Hotel de Ville. When the annoucement of Floquet's election was made there was deafening shouts of "Long live Floquet," "Long live the republic," mingled with cries of "Down with the Panama thieves," and "Down with the bribed politicians." The delegates from St. Denis shouted, "Long live the Commune." The followers of Floquet replied: "Long live the republic."

The Soir newspaper says M. Floquet's triumph repairs if it does not efface his defeat in the last general election of deputies. The defeat of the



M. FLOQUET.

Goblet candidate Longuet is regarded by the Soir as a protest against the conciliatory attitude of M. Goblet and his followers toward socialism.

The returns up to midnight showed the election of seventy-eight republicans, nine radicals, two "rallied" and five conservatives.

COLORADO'S LEGISLATURE.

Doubtful If Any Important Measures Will Be Passed.

DENVER, Colo., Dec. 8. —The Colorado legislature will assemble in special session next Wednesday under the call issued by Gov. Waite. The senators without regard to party will caucus this evening and the populist members of the house will also caucus this evening. The house is controlled by the republicans, who have a clear majority of one over all shades of democrats and populists united, and the latter seldom unite. The senate is controled by the republicans and democrats joined against the populists. Considerable more than a majority of the senators have put themselves on record as favoring adjournment immediately after the reading of the governor's message, and the caucus is expected to adopt that as its sense of the proper procedure. One house, however, cannot adjourn more than three days without the consent of the other, so the senate will be held by the action of the house.

The house will probably decide to sit and consider the governor's thirty-three recommendations, but the most devoted adherents of the governor doubt if any bill of any character will be passed by the assembly.

THE ASHTON JURY VIEW THE SCENE.

Spot Where Mrs. Stone Was Killed Visited Today.

SEVERAL SENSATIONS SPRUNG SATURDAY.

Opening Arguments Brought Out the Line of Facts That Both State and Defense Expect to Prove--Mrs. Stone Described as Being Jealous and Moody--Is Detective Burt Suspected?

Bundled in big coats the jury, attorneys and court officers drove overland to the scene of the Stone murder this morning. Two carryalls and two hacks were used and the procession left Janesville at 9 o'clock. The jury were in charge of Deputy Sheriff L. M. Nelson and Under Sheriff A. K. Cutts. When they arrived at the farm an examination of the premises was made, the sink under which Mrs. Stone was found inspected and Judge Bennett opened court long enough to take the testimony of old Mrs. Preston, the aged mother of Mrs. Stone, she being too old to be brought here.

Beside the jury delegation was made up of Judge Bennett, Court Reporter Kavaledge, Clerk McGowan, Attorneys W. G. Wheeler and B. F. Dunwiddie of the state, E. M. Hyzer, John Winans and E. G. Carpenter of the defense.

They will return this evening and the case will be resumed Tuesday morning.

Points Made in the Opening.

In the opening addresses Saturday the Damon-and-Pythias love of Daniel Stone and his brother Robert was admitted and outlined by both sides.

The faithful and efficient work of Matthew Ashton as the manager of the Stone farm was outlined by the defense.

The painstaking labor of G. C. Biederman in the same capacity until he was supplanted in Stone's good will, was shown by the state.

The jealous disposition of Mrs. Stone as far as she and her husband were concerned, was told by the defense.

That Mr. Stone was a man whom it was hard to influence the defense asserted while the prosecution insisted that Ashton easily manipulated him

If murder was committed Attorney Winans said, the defense would show that Detective Burt had more opportunities to do it than Mr. Ashton.

Both sides showed in their opening that skilled surgeon would be pitted against skilled surgeon and that several sensations not yet brought to light would materialize before the question of "Is Matthew R. Ashton guilty or not guilty of the murder of Caroline Stone?" was decided.

B. F. DUNWIDDIE OPENS THE CASE

Testimony Pointing to Ashton Reviewed in Detail--Conflicting Stories Compared.

B. F. Dunwiddie opened the case for the state, beginning his speech at 2 o'clock and speaking until 4. After outlining the fearfulness of the crime alleged to have been committed, he told how Mr. Stone came to Wisconsin in 1836 and lived here ever since, leaving about $200,000 when he died. Daniel and Robert came together, but Robert married. What one owned the other owned however, and when Robert's wife died he went to live with Daniel, and the murdered woman became their housekeeper. For some years she worked for the two brothers. Back in the sixties Mr. Stone went blind. He had asked Mrs. Stone to marry him while she was his housekeeper, but she was engaged to another man and refused the offer of her employer. She married this man but he died, and she returned to the Stone household again Then Mr Stone renewed his proposal and it was accepted and in 1880 they were married. Mr. Stone was described as a man of fine proportions, six feet tall, and was seventy-seven years old at the time of his death. He had known Mrs. Stone since she was fourteen years old. She was described as a small woman weighing but 130 pounds.

G. C. Biederman Came.

"There had been employed upon the farm for four years one G. C. Biederman, Mr. Dunwiddie said, who became the right hand man of old Mr. Stone until 1888. The old couple lived happily together, he continued, until there came into the home the man who is charged with the murder, Matthew R Ashton, who came from Canada in 1882 or 3 on a visit Later he returned again and took charge of the Pope farm. Up to this time Biederman had been the trusted lieutenant of the blind man and had married Mrs. Stone's only daughter by her first husband. Ashton came in November 1887 and his goods not yet having arrived from Canada he took up his abode with the Stone family. In February he removed to the house that he has since lived in.

"Ashton at once began planting suspicion in the heart of Mr. Stone against his wife" said Mr. Dunwiddie, "and we will show that it was deliberately done and in hopes of getting her out of the way. We will show" he continued, "that he had said that he himself would have all the property."

Stirred Up a Row.

Then Mr. Dunwiddie referred to a note and mortgage which he claimed was made out in Mr. Stone's name which Mr. Ashton claimed was his, the note and mortgage being drawn by E. F. Carpenter.

"That is not so; you cannot prove it!" remarked Mr. Carpenter in measured tones as he interrupted Mr. Dunwiddie.

"I dislike to talk of this subject" said Mr. Dunwiddie and the court cautioned Mr. Carpenter not to interrupt until his turn came. Later on in his speech Mr. Dunwiddie said that Mr. Carpenter and Mr. Ashton had sworn that Mr. Stone never gave Mr. Ashton the note, which Mr. Carpenter also denied.

Then came the story of the assault on Mr. Stone in which Mr. Dunwiddie told how after Mr. Stone had been struck he told Mrs. Stone to "call Matt." She went to ring the farm bell but the chain broke. Then she called "Matthew!" from an upstairs window but got no answer. Fishermen at the mouth of the Catfish river heard Mrs. Stone call and answered her, Mr. Dunwiddie said, but Ashton did not answer. She then went to Ashton's house and his wife said he was in the barn. He said when questioned that he did not know that Mr. Stone had been assaulted.

Stone Expected Trouble.

"Uncle Dan told me" Ashton continued, "that he expected to have trouble and that he didn't think that he would have to go far to get it."

Then Ashton, Mr. Dunwiddie continued, began to instill into old Mr. Stone's soul, that it was Mrs. Stone who did the clubbing. Shortly afterward Mr. Stone left for Iowa and City Marshal Spangler, of Edgerton, hired Detective Burt of the Pinkerton agency, who came to the house in the guise of a fisherman, to find out who assaulted him. The night before the murder Mrs. Stone and he had a long talk the tenor of which will appear later.

The "morning of the murder," he continued, Mrs. Preston, Mrs. Stone's mother, first saw Mr Stone putting on a clean linen collar and then go out of the room. Later Mrs Preston got up and saw that a fire had been made in the stove and breakfast preparations were under way. One of the hired men saw Mrs. Stone come out of the pantry and Ashton was seen standing at the corner filling a tank with water.

Story of the Crime.

"Ashton entered the house" Mr. Dunwiddie said with increasing emphasis, "and about that time Mrs. Stone got into the cistern with no one there but Matthew R. Ashton.

"Then he takes his team" he continued "and, as he says himself goes to 'salt cattle.'"

"Burt, the detective comes down the stairs. He had noticed that Mrs. Stone had not fed her chickens that morning although he had been writing at his open window directly over the place where she was accustomed to feed them and where she had usually looked up to him and said 'good morning.' He saw Ashton at the well and the hired men go to do their chores.

"Then Mrs. Stone disappeared.

"Ashton went to a neighbors named Conway he continued "and when he returned he was met by a man who asked him 'if they had found the woman yet.',

"What woman?" he asked.

"Mrs. Stone" was answered.

"Then he became embarrased," Mr. Dunwiddie affirmed "and grew red in the face." The attorney was now in earnest and became dramatic in word and gesture.

Saw Her Feed the Chickens.

"Have you seen her?" was asked of Ashton.

"Yes,' Ashton replied," continued the lawyer, "I saw her feed her chickens!"

"That thing," thundered Mr. Dunwiddie, "Did not occur! The chicken feed was all in the pail," "untouched and when the chickens were later fed, they were ravenously hungry.

Then Ashton immediately set to work to tell what he had been doing!"

It was Ashton, he continued with the story, who suggested to "look in the cistern," and then went down to show his horses to a man. This awakened the indignation of Marshal Spangler and the detective who said to Ashton:

"For God's sake, Ashton, ain't you going to help find that old woman?"

Ashton joined in the search with reluctance, and two hours later the body was found in the cistern. When it was gotten out Drs. Lord and McManus were summoned from Edgerton by the coroner. One set of her false teeth were found in the cistern and the other set were wrong side up in her mouth. The body was rigid. Here came a detailed description of the wounds found, all of which have been described before, except that there were found upon the lungs spots indicating strangulation. The day following District Attorney Wheeler and Drs. Palmer and Mills went up to make an examination What they found was also told and Mr. Dunwiddie said that medical testimony would show that the injuries were inflicted while the heart was working.

"Our evidence will be largely circumstantial" he continued, "all we have are facts and circumstances that will show how conclusively that Mrs. Stone was murdered and that the defendant was the murderer."

A ten minutes recess followed and then Attorney E. M. Hyzer opened the case for the defense.

MR. HYZER'S OPENING ELOQUENT.

Ashton's Good Life Outlined and the State's Weakness Indicated.

"I shall endeavor to present to you the defendant's case," said Mr. Hyzer in a mild voice. Daniel Stone, by his unaided efforts and with but seventy-five cents in his pocket could hew out a fortune. This fact he thought showed that he could not be easily wheedled or imposed upon. He was a peculiar man in many ways In his earlier years Mr. Stone lost his eyesight which bound the two brothers Daniel and Robert, closer together. Able, shrewd and energetic, for many years he managed that big Fulton farm; his farm in Iowa and all his other business. As he grew older he was physically unable to see to it and finally made up his mind to get Ashton to come and help them. Prior to this time Asnton had lived in Canada. He was a nephew of Daniel Stone, his mother being Mr. Stone's favorite sister. He lived the quiet, peaceable, upright life of a farmer. It would appear it this trial, Mr Hyzer said what manner of life he led. From Mrs Stone's advent trouble began. "It is not my desire to speak ill of a woman whose mouth is closed by death," he continued, "but soon after the housekeeper was compelled to leave because of the jealousy of Caroline Stone. The woman's disposition was peculiar and inclined to jealousy of anything and everybody who concerned her or Mr. Stone."

Ashton Came Under Contract.

"When Ashton came at Stone's request," he went on, "there came upon Mrs. Stone evidence of this jealousy and upon her suggestion to Mr. Stone, Ashton removed to the other house; the one where he has since lived. You can see the motive that Mrs. Stone had to dislike Ashton and his family, because it concerned her daughter, Mrs Biederman. Mr. Stone didn't want the daughter's husband to run his affairs. This was before Ashton came. Ashton took hold to control the labor, and paid no attention to any other business. He asked no man to go ahead of him, but set the example himself. That kind of service made Stone like Ashton, and he liked him more every day he stayed there. He went much to Ashton's house for his mail, which Matthew brought him from the postoffice. Mrs Stone became jealous with a jealousy that ruled her. Shortly after Daniel Stone and the Ashtons formed these associations, E. F. Carpenter, who had been the attorney and confidential advisor of Mr. Stone, at Mr. Stone's request drove up to see him. Mr. Carpenter overtook Mrs. Stone riding with a neighbor and took her in his buggy She began to talk of her relations to Stone and saying that she had nothing to show for her work.

"He's got to stop going down to Matthew Ashton's, she said; "I don't know that he is untrue or not, but he's got to stop or I'll make war on him clear to Janesville."

Jealousy Grew on Her.

"This ill feeling increased, and at times when these fits were upon her, Mr. Stone left his house and slept in the barn. For sake of peace from her bitter tongue he sought rest on the hay in the stable," he continued. "He was not a man of many words and had no controversy with her. After they had been so related Mr. Stone made a will. Mr. Carpenter drew that will leaving the home farm in Fulton and the stock on it to Ashton, charged, however with a life estate to his wife, Caroline Stone, in one-third of that real estate, also giving her a one-third interest in all the real estate he owned and $3000. The balance he left undisposed of, excepting one bequest of $500 to his sister. He did not leave his whole property to Mr. Ashton. Mr. Stone had no children; he left the farm to Ashton because he liked him and because he had managed it so well. You will see the relations of these people. The malice of Mrs. Stone, perhaps, that of an unbalanced mind: was exhibited in April 1882 when Daniel Stone carried a wheel, a piece of a farm machine, to Ashton's home and after returning, walked up and down in his front yard. When seventy-five feet from the house something struck him on the head and he thought he had walked against the limb of a tree or something had fallen on him. He got a second blow and thought he felt something brush against him and he called.

"Help, someone is trying to murder me!"

Mrs. Stone went out and led him into the house. His head was cut. He told her to call Ashton and when she tried to ring the bell the rope broke. So she called and help came. Ashton was employed at the barn, but he soon heard of it and went up to the house. Mr. Stone had suspicion of who struck him."

Made a Significant Remark.

"'If Caroline had been in her right mind she never would have done it,' he said."

"If anyone had tried to murder him they would have hit him harder," continued Mr. Hyzer. "The blow indicated just what happened and fulfilled the prediction that had been made. Mrs. Stone in various ways endeavored to belittle the affair saying 'that some crazy man was running in these woods.' Mr. Stone offered a $1,000 reward for the arrest of the person who struck him and Detective Burt came at Stone's request. Mrs. Stone showed a despondent disposition with times of brooding, etc., and after Stone's leaving for Iowa she became worse; perhaps the result of something that she alone knew. She had stated that rather than be arrested for the assault she would kill herself. She thought that she was liable to arrest. Saturday before her death the detective had an interview with her and told his knowledge and suspicions and he said:

"'You'll hear something before Monday morning.' When he heard of her death he said——"

An objection by Attorney Wheeler broke into Mr. Hyzer's dramatic recital and the judge did not allow him to finish the sentence.

Is Burt Under Suspicion?

In the discussion that followed over the point of law Mr. Winans of the defense admitted that the defense might attempt, to show, that if murder was committed that the detective had more opportunities to do it than Ashton.

"On the evening before her death" he continued, "her mother retired first. They both slept in the same room. When Mrs. Stone went to retire she knelt and prayed and kissed her mother, an unusual proceeding for her. Up stairs were the hired men and the detective. About four o'clock the detective got up and sat at his table writing his report. Mrs. Stone got up first about six o'clock. At that time the detective was awake in his room. The two hired men got up and came down. Mrs. Stone spoke to them and they passed out. At this time unfortunately for him, Matthew R. Ashton was doing on Sunday morning just what he did on every morning, and about the same time; he was drawing water for the horses and then as was his habit he went into the kitchen and got a pail of swill and fed the hogs.

"Then the state claims", said Mr. Hyzer, with dramatic emphasis, "that within ten feet of a door where the mother might have entered; within eight feet of a door where a skilled detective could come in at any minute, Ashton throttled Mrs. Stone; crushed her body in and threw it into the cistern!"

Ashton No Criminal.

"He does not come from the criminal walks of life," he went on. "A plain, blunt farmer; if he had wanted to kill Mrs. Stone he could have done it a thousand times with less danger. Nobody heard a sound Could a woman be killed by one so unskilled without an opportunity to make a single outcry? The state is not in a position to show that those injuries would have rendered her insensible."

"About 6 o'clock Mrs. Preston came out and called Mrs. Stone and the detective came down Mrs. Stone did not appear, so they wondered where she was, although she was in the habit of going to the neighbors, and a boy, Alfred Cady, was sent on horseback to find her. Ashton had gone to Conway's with a horse. In the meantime the search was going on, and Ashton got back at 8 or 9 o'clock. They told him Mrs. Stone was missing, and he said that he had not heard it, as he had been at Conway's. Then he went to the Stone house and met Mr. and Mrs. Biederman, who said they could not find her.

"Have you looked in the cistern?" he asked, a perfectly natural question. They let a lantern down in the cistern and the lantern went out. They let it down again and it went out again. Biederman got into the cistern with a hook but did not find her. Then it was the daughter who said: "If you find her at all you'll find her hanging from a tree or in the river!"

The people continued the search but gave it up. Then Biederman suggested that they look in the cistern again and went down in himself. He used a garden rake and felt about with it until he found the body. They got a rope used in haying and tied it about the chest of the body with a slip noose which was so tied that the knot came on spot where the injuries were found.

Body Jammed in Tight.

Four men pulled on the rope and the shoulder lodged under the floor while four strong men pulled on that rope until one man called out.

"'For God's sake stop, or we will pull the woman apart!"

"They had jammed the body in so hard that it stuck there and they had to push her back, the detective taking off his coat and working while the sweat poured off him to get her back into the cistern. Then they chopped the side of the sink away and got her out A coroners jury came with Drs. Lord and McManus. who examined the body finding nothing except indications of drowning. I think they said they found a small discoloration over the shoulder blade on the same side where the rope was placed."

Mr. Hyzer then showed the wounds they found and the way the examination was made and the force necessary to accomplish it, demonstrating it upon a skeleton.

They found every necessary evidences of drowning. Death leaves its marks and when it starts from any certain point of the body you will find evidences of it in some of the organs. If death starts at the lungs breath stops first, but the heart will beat until it is drained and the blood is all in the venous side of the heart; the arteries empty and the veins full, and congestion of certain organs.

Sunday evening the district attorney got Dr. Palmer who said:

Drs. Palmer and Mills Go Up.

"There is no use of my going up there, after they have mutilated that body" but they went, he and Dr. Mills. This examination was made twenty-four or twenty-eight hours after death. They found no discoloration except on the spot where the rope came over the collar bone.

"It comes to this fine point" he continued "can physicians twenty-four hours after a prior examination tell by these conditions what caused them?"

"Could the work of the first physician cause them?"

"We propose to show you that it is an impossibility for them to tell what they claim to."

Mr. Hyzer also told how Ashton had testified before grand jury and coroners jury when he could not be compelled to do so. That he entered the house at that unfortunate time, for him, on the morning of the murder comes from his own mouth. He has not said "prove me guilty" but "I will tell all that I know."

TWO PRETTY GOWNS FOR A YOUNG GIRL.

DRESS DESIGNS ADAPTED TO MANY COMBINATIONS.

A Dainty Frock of Wool or Serge and Velvet--Bell Skirt With Crosswise Trimmings--Another Pretty Design In Dark Blue--Good Time to Buy Sterling Silver.

Frocks for the girl of 12 or thereabout are not quite the easy planning they have been for her up to this age. She has rather outgrown the blouse suits, except for tennis and gymnasium, into which it has always been possible to put her, and the guimpe dresses are also rather in the background. At the same time, her frocks must not grow too womanly. A pretty model that fills all these conditions is that shown. It is of English design, and English mothers are known to have admirable ideas about young girls' clothes, however they may lose them when it comes to dressing themselves.

This little frock is made in cloth or wool or serge and velvet, prettiest in the heavier goods. It has a bell skirt, with crosswise trimmings, edged with velvet. The waist is crossed and has the new epaulets of cloth, bordered with velvet. The pointed yoke and collar, the belt and deep cuffs, that extend above the elbow, are also of velvet.

Another pretty design for a girl of same age is a dark blue serge or cashmere, with a bell skirt and round waist. From the yoke line to the neckband the material is cut out in alternate stripes of space and strips, back and front. Soft silk, in a gay plaid or of a solid color in cherry, is laid in loose folds on the lining. The puff of the modified mutton leg sleeve is slashed at the shoulder in the same strips and shows more of the brightening silk. The lower part of the sleeve is slightly cut open at the wrist seam and faced with the silk, but not turned back. A soft belt of the silk finishes the waist. A pretty combination of this model for a brown eyed girl is of tan cashmere, with gold brown velvet or plush, which will beautifully bring out the lights of her hair and eyes. Where plush or velvet is used, it is laid on almost plain, very slightly pulled.

Sterling Silverware.

There never was a better time in which to buy forks, spoons and other silver ware, so far as prices are concerned. Silver articles are, as a rule, at least one-third less in price than last year, and there is an infinite variety to select from. The average housewife is content with silver plate of good manufacture for such large table pieces as trays, tea and coffee service, cake basket and the like, but she wants spoons and forks of sterling silver when this is practicable. In making a selection do not be beguiled into buying articles of very light weight because they cost a little less. Remember that spoons and forks of medium weight sterling silver will endure unto the third and fourth generation, while those of under weight first bend and then break in a comparatively short time.

The Newest Muffs.

A new shape of muff is made long and round, with a frill quite six inches deep at each end. Such muffs are lined inside with satin, and the frill comes beyond the edge. But a large sized muff is brought in lined in such a manner that it is not in any way stiff and so assumes a flat form. Velvet and moire are both employed for muffs, and they are trimmed with a cascade frilled down the center, edged with fur. Serge is used for muffs edged with astrakhan, trimmed with braid and intended of course to wear with serge gowns.

Orange Marmalade.

Take equal weights of oranges and sugar. Grate the yellow rind from one-fourth of the oranges. Cut all the fruit in halves at what might be called the "equator." Pick out the pulp and free it of seeds. Drain off as much juice as you conveniently can and put it on to boil with the sugar. Let it come to a boil, skim, and simmer for 15 minutes; then put in the pulp and grated rind, and boil 15 minutes longer. Put away in jelly tumblers.

Cream Candy.

Cream candy may be made with a pint of granulated sugar, one-half pint of water, 3 tablespoonfuls of vinegar or a teaspoonful of cream of tartar, a piece of butter the size of a hickory nut. Boil without stirring until it threads, then pull as soon as it can be handled.

A UNIQUE SCRAP RUG.

Novel and Pretty, but Inexpensive—Directions For Making One.

The scrap rug, with its rich and varied colored disks of plush, is bright and handsome. The foundation is dark brown canvas, 27 inches wide. A yard and a quarter makes an ordinary sized rug. An inch is turned under on each side, and four inches of each end is marked off and reserved for fringe. The disks are made of plush remnants from the upholsterer's, or the remains, old or new, of plush garments, trimmings or fancy work. Sixty-one disks, 2½ inches across, are first cut out, and from the scraps left smaller disks of any size obtainable are cut. The larger ones are applied first, 11 along each side, one exactly in the center, one in the middle of each end and the rest at regular distances apart on lines running diagonally from corner to corner and from the middle of the ends to the center disks in the side rows.

If the plush is loosely woven—liable to fray or ravel—the disks should be applied with buttonhole stitch, but if of firm texture they may be simply hemmed on. After the large disks are arranged the smaller ones are scattered in between, more or less thickly, according to taste and material on hand, but the rug is much prettier when there are no spaces left large enough to hold one of the medium sized disks. The ends are fringed and overlaid with heavy worsted upholstery fringe, mixed colors to blend with all shades, or a single color to match the darkest plush. The heading is buttonholed flatly to the canvas, and the nearest disks overlap it a trifle.

A lining of carpeting, ticking or any heavy material is faced smoothly over the under side and tacked to the canvas, invisibly, beneath the disks. The Household, authority for the foregoing, suggests that pretty but inexpensive rugs might be fashioned after this model by substituting burlap, pretty remnants of cloaking, cloth, etc., and yarn fringe for the materials named. Zephyr of different colors could then be used for a variety of stitches in applying the disks, or they could all be buttonholed in place with one color and the spaces between ornamented with fancy stitches in many colors—a nice way to utilize odd bits of zephyr and yarn.

Christmas Decorations.

Wherever there are children it is a wise plan to make much of the holidays, and no one thing perhaps adds more to the home festivities than the Christmas decorations. In most localities one room at least can be decorated at almost no expense beyond the labor required for tastefully placing the greens. If holly and mistletoe are not to be obtained, every country household knows where to find cedar, arbor vitæ, fir, ground pine and evergreen, which are always so effective for Christmas decoration.

First of all provide a Christmas tree for the little folk. This is most easily set up by securing it in the center of a heavy block of wood. The block may be concealed from sight by a covering of green beige or muslin. A deep frieze to place over doorways or arches may be made by sewing holly leaves and sprays in artistic designs on common brown wrapping paper.

If there are portieres, they may be looped back with evergreen wreaths, and a mistletoe bough placed to drop from the center just where one would naturally enter. Frosting plays an important part in these decorations—diamond dust, gold and silver powder and ground glass powder being used.

Bracing Them.

Mr. D. Poor Aymer (after missing for the third time)—The birds seem very shy this season, Parker?

Parker—Yes, sir. Perhaps if we fired together it might give them more confidence, sir.—Life.

HE WAS IN A HURRY.

Only Four Days to Spend Abroad and All Europe to See.

"Speaking of being in a hurry," said a traveler, "reminds me of a man I once saw in the tower of London, one of a little party that was being piloted through by a beefeater. He kept all the time just ahead of the pilot and seemed to be anxious to go faster and get through. Everybody else wanted to see everything, but this man would have liked to skip some of the things; still he couldn't say anything, for the pilot made good time right along until he came to the figure of a big man on a big horse, both in heavy armor and the man holding a great spear, a most impressive figure, representing I forget now who, but somebody famous in history, and the beefeater talked a little longer than usual. Here the man who was in a hurry broke in. 'Yes, yes,' he said: 'that's all right, but we can't stand here all day looking at that, you know,' and he moved ahead a little and waited all ready to go on. We all hoped that the beefeater would pay no attention to him; we need have no fear on that score, for he paid absolutely no attention whatever to him. An hour or two later we stood at the gate and bade the beefeater good-by. The impatient man and I walked away together. He wasn't the worst man in the world by any means. He was from Boston. He said he was a busy man and had very little time to spare; he was going back in the steamer he came over in, and, as he had only four days to do Europe in, he had really felt as though he ought not to spend half a day in the tower."

REALISM AT THE 'FRISCO FAIR.

A Mining Camp Shows Things Just as They Were in '49.

Most realistic is the mining camp of '49 in the midwinter fair of San Francisco. The good and bad features, the flashy and the picturesque, are set forth as they existed in the feverish days of goldseeking. The cabins of Mackay, Perkins and Jones (the two last named now senators of the United States) are reproduced to the life. There is a shanty saloon, with bar-keepers in rough shirts and boots, but they sell temperance drinks only. The typical gambling-den is not omitted, nor does the old miner fail to see the frontier postoffice, the tent or the frame hut in which his newspaper was rolled off a hand-press, and the rough barber shop where he had his hair cut when it grew down into his eyes. At one end of the camp are some Indian tents with real Indians, like those who used to buy firewater of the miners and often exchange shots with them when both were under its influence. At the other end of the camp a theater is shown, with candles for footlights and antiquated properties. Here the variety performances which used to delight the rude gold-diggers are repeated. And finally there is the mining camp graveyard with its scattered headstones.

As there has been much inquiry both by individuals and the press in regard to Columbia and the lands for sale adjacent thereto, we thought it advisable to offer our explanation together with the views of persons owning lots and lands there.

Columbia is situated in Hewitt township, Clark county, Wis., on the Northwestern line, C. St. P. M. & O. Ry. The lands were originally pine tracts with tall and thirfty timber, thus showing a fertility of soil far in excess of what is generally termed the "sandy lands" of Wisconsin. The soil is a heavy sand or loam soil with clay sub soil and sand stone foundation. There are no hills or swamps but a slightly rolling country. We believe the lands to be as good as any in the state for the purpose for which their natural adaptation fits them. No lands can be better for grazing and stock raising, and they will produce largely of various grasses, corn and potatoes. The sugar beet that has brought wealth to France, Belgium and Denmark, can be produced on these lands as shown by the Agricultural department, at Washington. H. D. Lochman, who owns and lives on a farm adjoining the townsite of Columbia secured fifteen dollars ($15.00) in first premiums for yellow dent corn and vegetables of various kinds at the county fair held at Niellsville this past fall. This speaks well for the country when in the county there is land valued at $100 per acre.

Among the many who have purchased lands and lots this summer, might be mentioned Mr. Jacob Burgy of Montello, Green county; one of the largest farmers there; also Mr. Ole Walden, of Argyle, LaFayette county, and John Bryner of Monticello, who purchased land at $7.50 per acre and is well pleased with the land. Mr. Burgy says he would not accept $10 per acre for this land of 320 acres. The soil, vegetation and character of the water all point to make a good and prosperous country. These lands are within the reach of all, and with proper treatment of the people of Clark county towards the people coming into that community will make that country the home of prosperous and wealthy people In the sale of lots the price is from $5 to $50.00, the company paying the taxes two years and in some cases giving free tickets from Chicago and Janesville to Columbia, and if the lot buyers will help build up the town and thereby increase the valuation of their lots, there is no reason why they should not make money on every lot bought. The water power of Fall river or Wedge's creek, of 1963 horse-power, was surveyed and power given by Edward Ruger, and the townsite surveyed by O. G. Bleedorn, of Janesville, Wis., and their reputation is too well-known to be questioned.

C. S. Graves. Dear Sir:—I am of the earnest opinion that the land you have, is adapted for grass particularly clover; I think three men and a team will clear from one to two acres a day. I am going to clear up some of mine in the spring, sow clover on it and run a springtooth harrow over it and my opinion is that I would have an enormous pasture for stock.

C. S. Graves, Janesville, Wis —

Dear Sir:—In reply to your favor of recent date regarding your land in Clark county, Wisconsin, I am well acquainted with the same having examined it carefully and find it of a black, sandy loam soil, clay subsoil with a sandy stone base, well watered with good springs and small streams, sloping gently to the south. I consider it cheap at the price asked and know of no better land in the state for grasses, potatoes and vegetables. For dairying and general farming there can be none better. It can be put up in shape for crops very cheap and there is no waste land as it can all be used. Yours Truly.

C. S. Graves, Dear Sir:—In traveling over the land you have for sale in Clark county, Wis., I find it most excellent for the price asked for it is without doubt the most desirable place for farming, stock raising and dairying, being well watered, abundant of grass and hear to market.

Yours, J. I. Oleson.

C. S. Graves. Janesville, Wis.

Dear Sir:—After a careful examination of your land in Clark county Wis., I purchased some of it and at the price of $7.50 per acre. I consider it cheap as the soil is of good quality with clay subsoil and will make good farms. There is excellent water and I would advise anyone to buy this land in preference to going west or paying $40 to $75 dollars per acre. I also own lots in Columbia and after seeing them are perfectly satisfied. You can refer any one to me if you want to. Nils Anderson.

It may not be known to the general reader, says a medical journal, that a rifle ball deflected from its course immediately resumes its line of flight after rimming the object it is unable to pass directly through. That is to say, a ball turned from its course by a rib, passes under the skin until it reaches a point mathematically opposite to the point where it entered the soldier's body, and then passes out, resuming its exact line of flight, if enough of its initial velocity remains.

King Oscar of Sweden once passed through a little town, which was festively decorated for the occasion. Among the rest, a huge transparency, affixed to a gloomy looking edifice, attracted his attention. It bore the inscription: "Welcome to Your Majesty!" in gigantic characters. "What building is that?" the king inquired. "That is the country prison, your majesty," replied one of the aldermen. The king laughed, and was heard to observe: "That is carrying matters a little too far!"

A HOOD FOR A CHILD.

The Pattern Is an Easy One Worked In a Semicircle—It Is Bordered With a Lace Edging—How the Lace Is Made.

The Housewife gives these directions: Use rather thick cream colored wool, and begin by crocheting on as many stitches as are wanted for the depth. For a child of ordinary height cast on 32 stitches.

First Row—Having made a chain of 32 stitches, have three stitches for the double crochet, and work 29 single crochet. Cut off the wool.

Second Row—Twenty double crochet on the 20 of the preceding row, and 10 single crochet on the following single crochet.

Third Row—Ten single crochet and 10 on the 20 of the preceding row. After these 20 cut off the wool.

Fourth Row—One row of 30 double crochet, on which 10 single crochet to the inside, and then 20 rows, cutting off the wool at the end of every row, repeat the single crochet at each row, which gives the shape to the cape.

At the twenty-first row only 10 double crochet on the 10 of the preceding row, plus 20, of which 10 single crochet, four other rows to follow of the same, 20 double crochet and 10 single crochet. At the twenty-sixth row, only 10 double crochet on the 10 of the preceding row; then the row following 20 double crochet; 10 on the 10 of the preceding row, and 10 on the 10 of the following row. The twenty-seventh row is finished off by eight rows of 20 double crochet and 10 of single crochet. The first half of the cape is finished; the second half is different—70 rows needed in all. Work the first row of stitches tightly to make a border or edge at the bottom of the cape.

CHILD'S CROCHETED CAPE.

The hood is made of 12 rows of double 30 crochet, without increasing or decreasing, and at the end of each row cut off the wool, as in the cape. After the 12 rows are done, double the work in two on the wrong side, putting the first double crochet of the twelfth row against the last of the same row, and sew up the 15 double crochet on each side; work the hood on to the cape by a row of tightened stitches, which is also done on the two extremities of the cape not covered by the hood. On this row an intermediate space is left by the separated double crochet by a single chain stitch. This space is worked round by a lace edging, one single crochet on the stitch that separates the two double crochets, four double crochet on the following stitch that separates the two other double crochet, one single crochet on the following stitch, and so on to the end.

The lace is worked in two rows. The first is begun at one side of the cape; six chain stitch on the fourth, a double crochet on the second, not on the edge; a double crochet on the second stitch following on the edge of the cape, finishing off the first double crochet; three chain, one double crochet put before the first of the following row and not on the edge, one double crochet—after the first following double crochet worked into the cape—ending the first double crochet; three chain, and so on to the end. Work this row in silk—one stitch on the first stitch of the three making the double crochet—five chain, one stitch on the third stitch; four chain, one stitch on the second double crochet; work on to the cape on the right side; four chain, one stitch on the first chain of the three following rows; three chain, and so on, repeat. The hood is edged with the same lace, and sew on two bows of ribbon at each side of the seam and run a ribbon through the holes so as to tie a bow in front.

JANESVILLE MAN A CRONIN WITNESS.

FRANK BARDEEN WAS FORMERLY OF THIS CITY.

Man Who Turned the Electric Search Light on Dan Coughlin as the Big Detective Walked Behind the Bloody Trunk Married a Bower City Girl.

If Dan Coughlin hangs a former Janesville man will have the credit.

Frank Bardeen, for years a resident of this city, is on the stand today telling how Coughlin marched behind Cronin's body on the night of May 4.

Bardeen not only lived here, he found his wife here and many friends of both are watching the Chicago trial with renewed interest since he was shown in.

Bardeen moved from here to Beloit. He became an electrical engineer and on the night of May 4 about twenty minutes to 2 o'clock he was sitting on the steps of the Edgewater electric light station in North Chicago. A wagon with three men in it approached aud when it was less than sixty feet away something about the party made Bardeen curious He reached up and shifted the switch on an electric headlight and threw the beams upon the wagon. The full light with all its reflecting power blazed directly on the wagon and those accompanying it, and at the rear of the wagon, walking, he saw Dan Coughlin.

The big detective stood sharply outlined in the blaze of the electric light and his recognition was absolute.

Bardeen followed the wagon with his search light until it passed out of danger. He saw the trunk very plainly and could have identified all three of the men but Coughlin was the only one he knew.

Mr. Bardeen had almost forgotten the wagon and Dan Coughlin until he read the revelations in the papers a few days later. Then he told his wife what he had seen, but he said nothing to the state's attorneys through fear of personal inconvenience. He mentioned the story to a traveling companion a year after the trial ended, however, and in that way it came to Captain Schuttler's ears. For a time Bardeen refused to testify in the second trial but his wife and the state's attorneys finally convinced him that it was his duty. He came from Otsego, Michigan to tell his story, being engineer of the Bardeen Paper Co He stands very high in Otsego as a man of culture and refinement.

KNOW ONE THING THOROUGHLY.

Doctors Who Hold To One Thing Are Most Successful.

The man or woman of ordinary intelligence will not question the statement that the average mind can grasp and master one branch of business successfully. What is true of business is equally true of the professions. The attorney whose mind and thought is given to office work is frequently weak before a jury; the theological professor, whose knowledge of doctrine and religious truth may be greatly in advance of the man in the pulpit, who holds spell-bound his audience Sunday after Sunday, is at his best when instructing a class of young men for their life work.

In the medical profession a skillful surgeon is frequently a poor practitioner, because his study and practice are in other lines. The organs of the body are a complete study frequently baffling the brain and skill of the most able.

The science of anatomy is yet in its infancy and discoveries are being made every day in this study of all studies, that tend to prolong life and relieve suffering. Dr. H. A. McChesney the eye and ear specialist who recently located in Janesville, and whose success is already recognized as phenomenal is a fair specimen of what can be accomplished by a man who devoted his life and energy to the study of diseases that effect two vital organs of the body. He claims that catarrh, which is so prevalent in this climate, is purely a disease of the blood and that it is the prime cause of many diseases. Deafness, partial loss of sight, and frequently blindness can be traced directly to catarrh as the prime cause. His blood remedy for this disease has no rival, and taken in connection with his local treatment, a cure almost invariably results.

Hall & Co., the reliable jewelers, is a sufficient guarantee that it is a good one. It is on exhibition in their window. The tickets will be ready tomorrow afternoon at four o'clock at Hall & Co's. jewelry store.

THE Gazette has been besieged today by people who want to know why their children in some of the lower grades are required to bring a compass to school. An effort was made to question Superintendent Mayne concerning the new branch of work but he had left his office for the day.

C. S. GRAVES has sold his land in Clark county to the C. S. Graves Land Company, and they are forming colonies to locate there in the early spring, and any one renting or working a farm upon shares would do well to see this company before making arrangements for next year. For best of credentials regarding the land see their ad on page 3.

FREEZING TO ICE KEPT HIM ALIVE.

RICHARD BIRKNESS IN THE RIVER FOR AN HOUR.

Broke Through At the Foot Of Rock Street About 11 O'clock Sunday Night and Was Without Help Until He Almost Lost His Consciousness.

Richard Birkness came near furnishing substance for a coroner's inquest last night. He walked off the edge of the ice into Rock river and hung for fifteen minutes screaming for help. When help came he was unable to move. He was mumb and almost unconscious, and nothing but the fact that his arms had frozen fast to the ice saved him from slipping back into the current.

Birkness was out late and attempted to carry home a heavy load of beer. Reaching Rock street on South River he turned and deliberately walked down on the ice into the river. He fell in deep water, and it was the merest luck that his arms struck the ice.

Fully fifteen minutes he called for help before he was located. Charles Young and Will Cunningham were on their way home when they heard him, and ran to the river. While they were trying to get a rope, Birkness' calls were heard by men crossing Court street bridge and Patrolman Hogan, Dr. Pember and W. W. Skinner appeared.

A rope was thrown out but Birkness was too weak to hold it. Finally an ax was procured and the ice was cut from the shore to the place where the man was imprisoned and Charles Young ran down on the ice and brought him to shore. Dr. Pember and Patrolman Hogan worked for nearly an hour to warm and resuscitate him, and it was after mid-night when he was pronounced out of danger. He was in the water over an hour.

Hard Times Makes Them Pray.

Rev. Ostrom, the evangelist who conducted the revival meetings lately held here, in speaking of his success, said to us that the hard times greatly promoted his revival work. We have no doubt this is so. There are a good many people who will never go to the Lord for help as long as anybody else will trust them.—Madison Journal.

Chicago Board of Trade.

CHICAGO, Jan. 6.—The wheat trade got stirred up again this morning. The exparts wheat and flour both coasts for the week were 3,200,000 compared with 2,936,000 the week previous and even exceeded the exports of a year ago by nearly 200,000 bu. In addition it was stated that available wheat stocks, United States and Canada and afloat for Europe, were not materially changed during December, whereas December, 1892, showed these stocks increased 6,500,000 bu. In addition the cold wave talk was renewed and the zero weather already reached points in Iowa. The bull leaders got under the market and put the May price from 66½@66⅝c after the opening to 67¼c the first hour. But the public cables were not of a supporting character with American wheat quoted ½d lower. The market lost its support quickly and a decline set in. The May price started at 66⅝c, touched 66½@66⅝c, went on the bulge to 67¼c, dropped back to 66⅝c at 11 o'clock and later held around 66¾c, or ⅜c over last night.

The bulls had the best of it at the close in wheat. Primary points had but 1,871,000 bu compared with 2,987,000 bu last week, and 4,493,000 bu a year ago. There was an up-turn on the late buying to 67⅛c, and the close was strong at 67c bid.

The corn trade labored under the heavy receipts. Atlantic ports cleared 209,000 bu, and the clearances from last Saturday to last night were about 1,300,000 bu. The receipts weighed heavily. The cars for the day were 416. The estimate for Monday was 559. This and the break in wheat after the early bulge caused a loss of the gain in corn. May sold 38⅝c to 38⅛c back to 38½c, the closing point Friday, and firmed again to 38⅝@38¾c.

The hogs for the day were posted at 26,000. The large run was naturally against prices of products. The estimates later were for 38,000 hogs Monday and 170,000 next week. Pork lost but 5c from last night, closing $12.70 for May. Lard was at $7.57½ and $7.52½, closing $7.55. Ribs were off 5c at $6.55 May.

It took four months for four men to do seven inches of a cashmere shawl one yard wide, working from 5 in the morning till 5 in the evening every day; so it was hardly to be wondered at that two yards should cost $500.

FLAWS IN THE BIBLE DO NOT HURT IT.

REV. MRS. GIBB TRACES THE SCRIPTURES' GROWTH.

There Were Religious Books Among All Nations, She Avers, And The Crowning Volume Was That Which We Possess.----Not Necessarily Without Errors.

Rev. Mrs. Gibb's second lecture in the course on the bible was delivered last evening to a large and appreciative audience.

Her topic was "The Origin and Influence of Sacred Books" and in its treatment she showed much earnest study and intelligent investigation of her subject. She holds that the bible is not less, but more valuable than it is commonly held to be, not however a flawless oracle or an infallible product of inspiration, but a record of the evolution of religious ideas showing how truth grew upon the Hebrew and other nations until it culminated in the gospel uttered by Jesus Christ. Later on she insisted these principles were marred by Judaism, the blight of which remains to this day. Mrs. Gibbs insisted that she sought to prejudice no one, but to speak the truth, not so much on her own personal authority as on the authority of the scholarship and common sense of the present and thus to free the bible from the encumbrances of false and contradictory dogmas which she said were alienating many thoughtful minds from its best influences.

A Correction.

In Saturday's issue of the Gazette, we unintentionally stated that the C. S. Graves Land Co. had 2,400 acres of land for sale in Clark Co., and that some of it had been sold for $75 an acre. We should have stated they have 24,000 acres and some sold for $7.50 per acre, as you will see in their advertisement today in another column.

From the great nebula of Orion, where thick is sown the star dust, interspered with suns of many colors,

From those vast swirls, tremendous spirals, inspiring awe too deep for mortal speech,

From the Beehive and the Lion's Heart, Aldebaran, and the sparkling Pleiades, where dwell Alcyone, Merope and those other sisters, with mist engarlanded, some Spirit's vital breath,

From Polaris and his Guardians, blazing in arctic skies, where streams the Aurora Borealis, mystic wonderful,

From swift Arcturus, Bootes, mighty one, the Driver of the Bear,

From Cepheus and the fair Andromeda, Cassiopeia, Egypt's queen, Perseus and the Dragon, the demon Algol and the enormous Square of Pegasus,

From Cygnus, Lyra and the Northern Crown, Hercules and Ophiuchus huge, sung by Milton the blind, the deathless,

From all the stars and constellations which make bright the heavens,

From all the planets and their moons, the rings of Saturn and from all the meteors that inhabit space, I gather up the fragments of my past incarnate lives, counted by thousands, aye, and thousands yet to be,

From all of these I make one voice, and into it I breathe my hopes, my aspirations and my love for dear old Boston, and I cry:

Hail, ancient city! May all that makes you famous and unique endure forever! Ye poets, preachers, scholars, antiquarians, merchants, toilers, the old, the young, the rich, the poor, hail! I salute you!

I salute the crooked streets, Beacon hill, Faneuil hall, the old statehouse, the long path and Boston common!

THE DEVIL'S MILE.

He reined in his black horse in the courtyard of the Plough, and the foam fell from the black beast as snow from a bush. We had followed him with difficulty in the dark out yonder, for he rode like a madman, and a thousand furies at his heels could not have forced another effort from the 6-year-old mare which carried him so well. Heaven, what a madman he was, turning the whole village out to see him dare the Devil's Mile at 1 o'clock in the morning and coming home when an hour had gone, with the brute a mass of white, and he a shaking, quivering coward, who seemed to have lost in that 60 minutes out and home every spark of the old devilry which had carried him on his mad errand! And where was Dick—Dick, who had taken up the mad wager to gallop the mile with no moon showing, and the mists rising from the channel, and the darkness lying thick between the hills, as though it had been dropped upon the land? Where, indeed, was Dick? Did he lie like a log in the hillfoot spring—had he broken his head at the White Row hurdle? Were we to go out with flambeaux and spread afield to bawl, "Dick, Dick, hast broken thy neck?" But the man who came in could tell us nothing. He had lost Dick the moment we had given him the word to go. Dick was well enough—that he would swear. It was he who needed our attention, and would we get him some brandy?

We got him the brandy, and we propped him up before the blazing fire in the kitchen—every one sat in the kitchen o' nights in that little Hampshire hunting box, the Plough, and then we began to look at him. He was very white, truly, and his hair was dank, as though he had been dragged through the ditch in the clover patch, but beyond this there was a very fever of fear marked upon him. In all my life I have never seen such a depth of nervous degradation. He trembled like a horse that has scented fire, and for many minutes he could not speak a word to us. With any other man this would have excited our merriment, but with Douglas Tasker! Why, there was not a man in the country who had half his devil or could hold him for a moment over any sort of country. The thing was too absurd, and I waited for his explanation, knowing well that it would vindicate him.

But it was curious that such a lightly made wager should have had such an end, and I fell to recalling all the old women's tales of the hills and of the bevy of sprites and imps that haunted them. Pshaw! What rubbish they all were!

It had been some three hours before this ride that Douglas had thrown down the glove to the equestrian sages of the inn. There were a dozen of us there dining in our quiet way—old Colonel Blake, who had hunted the pack 30 years ago and now hobbled out to his dog cart on crutches; Harry Blake, the whip; Dr. John, who swore that the hunt cheated him, for there were no tails; several boys just promoted to cobs and half a dozen of the very straightest horsemen we could show. We had these little gatherings many a night in the winter, and many a man hunted over the table there as he had never hunted over the country round. I used to listen to their tales and say to myself I would write them all up some day, if Parson Bob Tollemache didn't write them before me. Aye, a rare hand with the pen was he, and as for the country he knew every inch of it—a veritable chart on a beach horse. That was a pretty argument for disestablishment when the bishop got him—the best that ever strode a pony over any gallop, with a nerve like bessemer and a judgment that never failed him. He listened that very night among us, and I saw the twinkle in his eye when Douglas offered to go out against the room at 12 o'clock and ride the Devil's Mile for a hundred down on the table at breakfast. He was sane, of course, and madmen only receive pity from him, but he said nothing. Who knows that the old spirit did not lurk somewhere down beneath the black in spite of 10 years of homily and "when the wicked man?" You can never tell, for parsons do not carry their hearts upon their sleeves for every daw to pick at, and he was no exception.

"A wager, a wager!" The cry had been taken up as the men rose to their feet, not a little flushed, I regret to say, and crowded around Douglas. Dick Helmre was the first to answer, "I take you," but in spite of their bravado none else came on. "Do you fear, boys?" cried Douglas again. "Will the night air stop your throats, or do you want time? I take any man the fair mile and a finish across the hillfoot bridge for a hundred with his morning tea. Answer when you like. There's my money—even if the devil himself stakes against me!"

There was another shout at the challenge, and Parson Bob put in his word: "You'll break your neck, boy," he said, "over the mile a night like this, and as for the devil, if you take any more of that wine, you'll be in good company." But Douglas was in no mood then to bandy words with the parson, and out we all went in a troop to see the horses saddled, leaving the old fellow at the end of his half bottle and at the beginning of his cigar, for he was a bachelor and dined at the Plough, when the men lived the life there in the hunting season. We were all too curious to see the meeting to think about anything inside, and our ardor was only stimulated when we saw the mist steaming up from the lowlands and the night as black as a tempest cloud with never an inch of clear sky or a breath of wind to grip the sea fog. What did it matter to us? There would be a horse or two laid up, and men would lie by with rheumatism for a day or two, but what odds? We should keep our necks at any rate, while the two madmen would lose theirs—and lose them assuredly they would on such a night and with such blackness on the land.

It was just 12 o'clock by the bell of the old church when we started the pair by the dead elm under the red farm, and off they went out of sight in a moment in the darkness of the hill. We had no intention to follow them to the mile end on such a night, and leaving them to their mad work we trotted back, a group of black figures in a gray mist, and hung about the door of the Plough until we should get tidings of them. And the only news was the return of Douglas, shaking and quivering like a stricken being—an object study for pity, as I have said. "What has happened?" we asked him a dozen times before he pulled himself together and told us the tale, and while he was speaking Dick came in and listened. Poor Dick! He had fallen heavily in the Plough and was in no mood for conversation, but he opened his eyes at Douglas' tale, as did we, and widely too.

"When you said 'Go,'" said Douglas as he seemed to gather his wits at last, "I set spurs to Peter, and he sniffed the dark like a trained horse and bounded into it, fearing as little as I feared. Dick seemed to disappear at once, though I made no pace in the heavy going, and I was just thinking that I had won an easy hundred when something black—a vague shadow on a black horse—seemed to come out from the very cavern of the dike, and old Peter nearly bucked when a hoarse voice cried, 'Wager, wager!' I don't fear man or devil, but I feel pretty sure I rode with something uncanny by my side this night, and the horse felt it, too, for, flog him as I would, he shivered like a leaf, and every step I thought he would come down. Not that I cared.

"'If you're man,' I said, 'I'll ride you for the hundred, and if you're devil I'll ride you for five,' and with that I clapped spurs to Peter again, and he went down the side of the dike like he or no other horse out of hades has ever gone before. Race—the wind cut my ears like a knife, and it was as if I rode on nothing, for the ground I could not see, and the sky I could not see, and the hills just loomed over me like mighty figures from another world. I went my best, and I don't believe any other 6-year-old in Hampshire could have staid like Peter staid, but judge of my fright when the shadow at my side crept up and up, and as we put down the hill to the bridge came full alongside me. I flogged old Peter then in a way very strange to him, for it was neck and neck to the narrow bridge, and only a shimmer of the rising moon on the mist held up the dark for us to see it. What a half mile that was I can never tell! I heard only the hard breathing of my horse or the thud of his heels on the soft ground, and as the man or fiend rode beside me I chilled again to the bone, for he made no sound, never touched his mount with whip or spur—he only went on like a flying thing in the air, and when we neared the bridge together I saw that there would be a crash and that we would both roll headlong into the stream below. Then I held my breath and waited for the moment.

"But it never came. You fellows know the spot—you know that the ground is 14 feet if it is an inch above the brook. You know there is a 20 foot span to the grass land across. Well, as I'm a living man, a hundred yards from the water the shadow left me as one standing, and as I almost reined in Peter to take the narrow bridge of planks I saw the black form rise for a moment in the air and then land on the bank. By heaven! he had jumped it, and if there's a living rider who can do the same I'll give him all I've got.

"But my story isn't done. The black thing stopped on the opposite bank, and as I drew near raised its arms above its head, and a loud, mocking laugh rang out among the hills. At the same moment, as my horse stood shivering with fright, the man's right hand threw something black at me, and I nearly swooned with terror. When I came to, I picked up the dark something which had been thrown, but in the blackness I could make nothing of it. Any of you who may choose to seek it will find it hanging at the girth, and if it isn't a fiend's headgear then I've dreamed the whole matter!"

In eager expectation we went into the stable and found the missile as directed. Quick and with anxiety we carried it to the kitchen and to the lamp. "By thunder!" said the doctor when he saw it, "it's the parson's hat!"—Max Pemberton in London Sketch.

RIVAL STORE-KEEPERS.

A Dealer Who Was Not to Be Bluffed by a Greedy Rival.

There was consternation in the great clothing emporium of Pants, Necktie, Boxcoats, Suspenders & Co. The hated rival across the street had stolen a march on them. In great flaring letters, on signs that stretched along the front of three blocks, it announced that it had bought all the manufactured clothing in the state, and was about to close everything out at sixteen cents on the dollar.

Clerks wandered about through the long aisles and discussed this latest move of the enemy with bated breath. The porters and the bundle-boys in the cellar talked of it in whispers. The blonde typewriter spoke of it in low tones through the grating around the cashier's desk with the brunette cashier. The bookkeepers shook their heads ominously over the long rows of figures in the ledgers, and everywhere there was distress and amazement. In the office the three junior partners raged up and down and grabbed out great handfuls of hair. They swore lurid oaths and broke the furniture.

It was a calamitous time for the firm of Pants, Necktie, Boxcoats, Suspenders & Co.

In the midst of the tumult the senior partner, P. R. Pants, strolled in. He noticed the air of suppressed excitement, and hastened to the office. "What does this mean?" he shouted to the three junior partners.

The harrowing circumstances were explained.

"My God!" said the three junior partners in unison. "What shall we do? What shall we do?"

The senior partner threw off his sealskin overcoat. Drawing himself up to his full height, he said: "Do? Why, open a new bale of blue denim overalls and announce a $6,000,000 sale of clothing bought at a sheriff's sale!" And the day was saved.

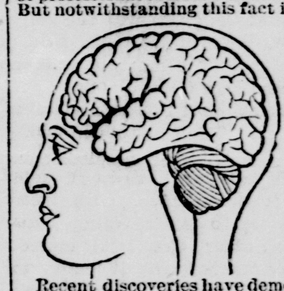
MYSTERIES!

The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.

No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain, and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.



Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force.

Two-thirds of chronic diseases are due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

DR. FRANKLIN MILES, the celebrated specialist, has profoundly studied this subject for over 20 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion, pressure, blues, mania, melancholy, lusanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principle.

DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

TOWER OF LONDON.

The World's Oldest Building Begun Before History Itself Took Shape.

The most ancient, the most picturesque and the most interesting pile in the world stands half a mile from London bridge, commanding the Thames from St. Saviour's creek to St. Olave's wharf, and is known as the tower of London.

The very name of this wonderful building suggests a thousand dramas, says Harper's Young People. It is a palace, a court, a hall of council or a state prison as the fancy chooses to make it. Its very walls speak with human interest, and every inch of the massive structure is identified with human life. Its existence began before history itself took definite shape.

A part of it was a Saxon stronghold, as is mentioned in Saxon chronicles. The remains of a Roman wall may still be traced near its foundations, which many writers insist have existed since the time of Cæsar. The plan of the building in its present form was commenced by William the Conqueror.

As it surpasses all other edifices in interest, so its antiquity dwarfs them into comparative insignificance. With its 800 years of historic life and its years of traditional fame, it may be said to be a part of all we know, and a part of what we are. The historic pride of other famous buildings pales before this grim old battlement.

The oldest place in Europe—the west front of the burg in Vienna—dates from the time of Henry III. The old Louvre was commenced in the reign of Henry VIII, and the Tuilleries in the time of Elizabeth.

Versailles had no existence before the time of the civil war in England, and its site was a swamp and a wilderness. The wonderful Escurial belongs to the seventh century, and the beautiful Sans Souci the pride of German emperors, was erected as late as the eighteenth century.

The Kremlin of Moscow and the doge's palace in Venice can date only to the fourteenth century, and the oldest part of the vatican was commenced by the man whose name it bears—Borgia. The Seraglio in Stamboul was built by Mahomet II, and the Serai of Jerusalem was erected under the dominion of the Turks.

The palaces of such ancient names as Athens, Cairo and Teheran are but modern inventions.

Within the vaults of this ancient pile many a book was written. There the accomplished duke of Orleans wrote his charming "Poesies." There Sir Walter Raleigh wrote his "Historie of the World." There Eliot produced his "Monarchy of Man," and Penn his "No Cross No Crown."

Upon its stones men and women have engraved the thoughts which burned within their souls, and every chamber tells a story of human experience. The mighty structure seems to echo with human ambition and glory, love and hate, hope and despair.

Tragedy and comedy walk hand in hand through its corridors. England's history is there, and with it much of the history of the world. Cranmer and Latimer and Ridley speak to us from its walls; Lady Jane Gray, Annie Boleyn and Elizabeth haunt us at every turn, and Raleigh and Wyatt and Sir Thomas More have stamped the very stones with the impress of their own lofty dignity.

Great in history, the tower is also great in literature. It colors the thoughts of Bacon and the inspiration of Shakespeare, and the one structure in the world which seems to have gathered into itself the great stream of human experience is the tower in London.

A CURIOUS COMPOSITION.

Written With a Needle by a Ballet Dancer Who Knew no Music.

Rameau, the celebrated French composer (1683-1764), is responsible for a very curious composition. The famous ballet dancer Salle, with whom he entertained very friendly relations, asked him one day to give her some instruction in the science of composing that she might immortalize herself by a composition of her own.

Half ironically, half gallantly, Rameau replied that it was unnecessary for him to give her any lessons, as all she would have to do was to wield the needle with which she produced such delicate embroideries. He took some note paper from his pocket and directed her to place stitch upon stitch within the staff or near the same. The beautiful girl did as she asked, and when she had finished Rameau took the sheet and transformed the stitches into notes. Not one was omitted by him, while he changed their value, etc, and prefixed the clef when he had finished. He then played the composition, greatly to the delight of the charming dancer.

The outcome of this little pleasantry was an exceedingly peculiar and piquant melody which Rameau later on embodied in his opera "Las Indes Galantes." It was played and sung with great success and became very popular. Under the title of "Les Sauvages" it was for a long time one of the most popular melodies of the age.

Mankind's Great Enemy.

Malaria is responsible for half the deaths of all mankind, according to an English physician. From his experience in India he learns that malaria is not confined to rich, low-lying soils, but is found even in sandy deserts. The negroes of the grain coast of Western Africa and the Taurus of Northern India are the only races proof against it. Both modern medicine and sanitation are powerless in dealing with it. Suggested preventives are the flooding of swamp lands and the planting of trees that will retain water and shade the soil—such as the plantain and banana, but not the eucalyptus.

A New Year's Gift Heralded

The measureless popularity of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has been the growth of more than a third of a century. As in the past, the coming new year will be ushered in by the appearance of a fresh almanac, clearly setting forth the nature, uses and operation of this medicine of world wide fame. It is well worth perusal. Absolutely accurate in the astronomical calculations and calendar will, as before, be valuable characteristics, while the reading matter will include statistics, humor and general information, accompanied by admirably executed illustrations. The almanac is issued from the publishing department of The Hostetter Company at Pittsburgh, and will be printed on their presses in English, German, French, Welsh, Norwegian, Swedish, Holland, Bohemian and Spanish. All druggists and country dealers furnish it without cost.

DESPERADO HUGHES NEVER SHED BLOOD

THE REMARKABLE RECORD OF HORSE THIEF CHARLEY.

From a Tenderfoot Gambler To a Hunted Bandit--The Career Of An Opera Bouffe Outlaw That Terminated In a Real Tragedy.

A decidedly unique bad man was Charley Hughes, who terrorized the entire northwestern section of Texas for two years without shedding a drop of human blood. He acquired an amount of notoriety in his business out of all proportion to the capital invested. Hughes went to Texas in 1876 and hired out as a cotton picker. Where he came from was not known to his neighbors or the Belcherville correspondent who recently wrote an account of his exploits for the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Toward the latter part of November he took some 50 odd dollars in cash and a beautiful bay mare that he had bought with part of his cotton picking proceeds and started to Henrietta to see the sights. Of course he took his winchester and his six shooter along.

The first sight that attracted him was a very agreeable gentleman named Tom Boyd, who was exhibiting three pieces of pasteboard to an admiring crowd and showing them what an easy thing it would be to guess which one would come uppermost in case he were to throw them down on the table. Charley was very much interested in the matter and felt confident of his ability to tell exactly which card it would be. So confident was he that before he knew it he had lost every cent of his money on the cards that perversely insisted on doing just what he expected them not to. Like all men, however, who succeed in their special line of business, he had the courage of his convictions, and hence offered to bet his mare against $50 that he could guess the right card this last time anyway. Mr. Boyd was kind enough to accept his proposition, but the cards were not so kind and again refused to do what it was obviously right that they should do.

That night Charley Hughes was in a bad condition. He was a stranger in a strange land, without money, without supper and without even a horse to go home on. What should he do? He pondered the subject awhile and then made up his mind. Late that night he went to Boyd's stable and stole out the fleet mare that only a few hours before had been his own property. By hard riding he reached Red River station before daylight and spent the rest of the night there.

Meantime Boyd had discovered his loss and had interviewed the sheriff of Clay county in regard to it. That official seems to have been busy about something else at the time, so he compromised matters by deputizing Boyd and telling him to attend to his own case. Boyd was a professional gambler, it is true, but this fact did not interfere with his being made a special deputy. He got on Hughes' track by some means and reached the station some hours before noon. Hughes heard of his arrival and concluded to travel farther east.

Boyd found Jack Pollard, a Montague county deputy, and four other men, and together the posse started out in pursuit. After they had traveled some nine miles, just as they were crossing a particularly level reach of prairie, the figure of a horseman suddenly appeared over the rise of a hill half a mile to the east. It was Charley Hughes, and he had his winchester at his shoulder. Ping! ping! went two leaden balls, and two horses and their riders were down in a struggling, confused heap.

To say that these shots demoralized the posse would be to put it lightly. However, when the dust cleared away, it was found that two ponies were writhing in their death agonies, while their riders were unhurt. The distance was too great for any effective shooting in return, and, moreover, Hughes disappeared as suddenly as he had appeared. The posse, two less in number, followed more cautiously than before. When they next caught sight of their game, he fired at them, and then, waving a quart bottle of whisky at them, shouted in stentorian tones:

"Awful good old stuff, fellows! Come on and take a drink, won't you?"

The pursuers remembered Charley's long range shooting and decided that they would not.

All day long a running battle was kept up. Nobody was hurt on either side, principally because the pursuers kept at a respectful distance. Back and forth they raced over the prairie, covering near 50 miles in all. Hughes was not making any special effort to get away, but was trying to reach the fringe of timber on Belknap creek, from which the posse had him cut off. After awhile Pollard's horse gave out and Boyd, with two others, followed alone. Near nightfall Hughes' mare gave out, and he had to take it afoot. The posse felt sure of their man now, but they were overconfident. Hughes, though on foot, shot viciously.

Finally Hughes reached a long, high wire fence, inside of which a young man named Morgan was driving a team hitched to a load of wood. Hughes was by the team in an instant, and drawing his gun down on the driver he shouted:

"Here, young fellow, cut out your best horse for me, quick!"

Morgan promptly obeyed, and Hughes galloped off. His pursuers had to hunt up the gate to the wire fence before they could follow. This gave him a start, and his fresh horse, together with the friendly cover of night, took him out of all harm's way.

Had he been as expert at keeping away as he was lucky in getting away, it would have been a good thing for him. Unfortunately, such was not the case. In the early part of the night a drizzling rain set in, and before midnight it was pouring down in torrents. Hughes, bewildered by the darkness and rain, lost his way and traveled almost in a complete circle. In the night he passed by Queen's peak, some 30 miles from where he slipped his pursuers, but just about daybreak he rode up to Shaw's ranch, not over two miles from Red River station, where the chase of the preceding day had begun.

Here he called for breakfast, which was given him. While he was eating, Wash Shaw recognized him and rode over to the station to notify the officers. A posse of 25 men had already been collected to renew the chase, and when they found where Hughes was they started immediately after him. When they surrounded the house, Hughes showed signs of offering desperate resistance, but as his weapons and ammunition had been injured by the rain of the preceding night he was unable to do anything. He was captured, bound hand and foot, and conveyed for safe keeping to the jail at Henrietta.

The jail at Henrietta was not an elaborate one, and as it was evident that so desperate a man as Hughes required safe keeping he was soon removed to the more pretentious structure at Jacksboro. The prisoner condescended to remain in it for exactly two weeks, at the end of which time he kicked out—not tunneled out or broke out, but literally kicked out—and made his escape in company with his only fellow prisoner, a man named John Slovan.

Hughes and Slovan seem to have been kindred spirits. They suited each other so well that they immediately formed a kind of professional copartnership. To begin with, they visited Hughes' old employer, Quinzenburg, stole eight of his best horses and made for the Red river, intending to take their horses to the territory and dispose of them. There had been heavy rains in the west, however, and before the partners could reach the river it had risen so high it was impossible for them to cross. Nothing daunted, they concealed their horses in a small canyon and struck camp not more than 15 miles below the station.

A posse of 29 men was collected to capture the two worthies in their encampment. They, however, were expecting such a visit and made preparations for it. They had constructed a regular barricade out of trees from the sparse fringe of timber that skirted the river and stones from the low cliffs near. They had so arranged things that they were well sheltered, while their assailants would have to fight on the open prairie. The posse arrived about sunrise, and then began one of the most remarkable battles in the history of the Texas frontier.

The posse dismounted at long range and deployed on the open prairie, taking such shelter as the small depressions in the almost unbroken ground afforded. From morn till noon, from noon till dewy eve, a summer's day, the crack of winchesters and the pop of heavy six shooters resounded. When night came, a consultation of the attacking party was held, and to the surprise of every one not a man had been wounded. The men were nearly worn out, several horses had been killed by stray shots, but nothing further had been done. Never was the potency of a name more forcibly illustrated. Had not Hughes been regarded as such a desperate man, the posse would have approached within short range and brought matters to a speedy conclusion. As it was, a detachment was sent to the fort at the station to ask for a piece of artillery, while the others kept up a fire all through the night.

Meanwhile during the night the beleaguered men kept up their courage by shouting unpleasant names at the posse and firing random shots that had a vicious whirring to them. Finally all was quiet. Next morning all was still quiet, and on investigation the officers found the barricade deserted. The river was still dangerously high, but the two men had swam it during the night. Hughes soon appeared on the opposite side in full sight. Bending over, he made certain gestures at the posse in a manner that might fairly be construed as contemptuous. He thought he was out of gunshot, but Henry Newbury, one of the posse, had a long range buffalo gun. While Hughes was still indicating by signs his contempt for the posse, Newbury raised his sights and fired, the ball going between Hughes' legs.

With a yell of astonishment the bad man took to the woods and was seen no more for the time being. Before swimming the river he and Slovan had abandoned their guns and horses. The latter were discovered hid in a canyon. They were allowed to stay there, though, as every one had its throat cut.

For about a year after this Hughes and Slovan terrorized the whole district. Heavy rewards were offered for their capture, but nobody ever captured them. If they stole all the stock they are credited with, they had a enough to stock a large ranch. Hughes was considered a desperate man and a fine shot, but somehow he never killed anybody and never seemed able to hit anybody.

All things have an end, however, and Hughes was no exception to the rule. If any reader of these lines feels attracted by his desperate but bloodless career, let him note the end of it. On one occasion Hughes and Slovan stole a yoke of oxen and a wagon and drove to Denison to dispose of the outfit. Hughes stopped with his oxen on the outskirts of town, while Slovan went in to negotiate a trade. Some one recognized him and informed the officers. He was arrested just as he had informed a prospective purchaser where the steers were. When the officers reached the place designated, they found Hughes asleep on the wagon. They covered him with their guns and then awakened him. When he took in the situation he made a grab for his winchester, but the officers were too quick for him and filled him full of lead.

Such was the bloody death of the only bloodless bad man Texas ever produced.

Shooting Off Your Mouth

Should be "Shooted" with care or some reporter will catch the shot and quote you thus:

FREE TRADE WOULD BE ALL RIGHT

Alderman Carrington Is Anxious to Have the Tariff Question Settled.

"There is no need of people crying hard times," said Alderman Carrington this morning. "This country is bound to prosper, whether it is free trade or protection. If congress would do either one thing or the other the country would be all right. If it is free trade laboring men will get down to a wage system of thirty cents a day. and so economize their living expenses that they will save one third of this amount, and the country will prosper. Manufactured articles are about exhausted, and the supply being short manufacturing must be resumed on some self-sustaining basis."

However this is a fair report of what Mr. C. did say but he didn't say it for "print."

What we do believe and what any thinking man or woman must believe is that the country is so rich, so vast, so grand in its resources that no political upheaval, let them upheave as they may, can CRIPPLE us for any great length of time We believe in a protective tariff. MOST sensible people do; some people don't and they are an honest some, and a sensible some too; but we believe beyond everything else in our country, UNDER ALL conditions. If the powers that be will settle on some policy be it TARIFF or FREE we will (as as a people) pull ourselves together and work on the basis that the "powers" elect and we shall win. No policy of government, or those that make laws, can cripple the country FOR LONG. We are not politicians we ARE real state dealers. We have some bargains in our line. Come in talk BUSINESS, let politics alone.

Not every woman knows how to make tea. The best Chinese teapots have strainers, the boiling water is poured over the tea and drained through it. The same principle is used in the silver tea ball, although the china is much better than silver. There is a delicious freshness and fragrance to tea made in this way. It would be useless to try and convince many hostesses that tea as it lies in the bottom of the teapot, develops tannic acid, yet this fact remains and the tea strainer discarded.
